LOVE JUICY BEEFSTEAK

NEW YORK HAS A UNIQUE CLUB OF GOURMETS.

Primitive Quarters Are Used but the Meat Is Turned Out as Tender as Butter and Makes a Palate Tickler.

From the New York Tribune. The favorite place for beefsteak dinners in New York is the Morgue, in West Fiftyeighth street. It is a big room, rather plain and bare, with its side made largely of glass, adjoining a liquor shop. It has been for years the meeting place of the Beefsteak Club, an organization that seems to have no limit of membership, no regu Beefsteak Club, an organization that seems to have no limit of membership, no regulation, no purpose and no law beyond a tendency to come to a focus at intervals and eat beefsteak. The focus is at the Morgue, with its sheetiron stove at one end and its row of soap boxes around three sides. The Beefsteak Club includes men of many callings, but a theatrical element predominates in it. Jesse Williams, the well known musical director, and Max Freeman, the equality well known stage manager, are among the most potent of its moving spirits.

There are no recognized permanent officers, but Max Freeman is often put in the chair—that is to say, on the middle soap box of the crescent—and there he tries to keep the others in some sort of order. But the discipline is rather more lax than it usually is when Mr. Freeman is conducting a comic opera rehearsal. Nobody cares much for rigid discipline, but some want a degree of tranquillity that will allow them to eat steak, and it has been found that this end is better served by letting Max Freeman try to keep the rest in order than by compelling the rest to try to keep Max Freeman in order.

Would Be Fatal.

Would Be Fatal. It is believed by many that a beefsteak It is believed by many that a beefsteak dinner would be irretrievably rulined by the introduction of such conveniences as tables, chairs, knives and forks. It is not known whether it would or not, because it has never been tried, at least at the Morgue. What its imitators may do or try to do the Morgue cares not. So there is no table at the Morgue, and there are no chairs. Around three sides of the room is a row of soap boxes, to which reference has been made before. Each guest has a box to sit on. This is regarded as a considerable concession. It would be more informal to stand up. Each two guests have another soap box between them. This is to put things on. The most important thing that is important is a good-sized towel. Some enthusiasts maintain, with a show of logic, that when you are going to eat beefsteak with your lingers, a napkin or anything to represent it is out of ceremony. But this opinion is not general, and a useful compromise is made on the towel.

Thus the preliminaries of the service are arranged. The cooking is the next important question. Perhaps it should have been the first. When you are going to have a beefsteak dinner you must first get your beef. It must be carefully selected, for it is no true beefsteak dinner unless the result is at least four times as good as anything that can be had at any hotel or restaurant in New York. The beef being selected by somebody who knows how to do it, it must be hung for a sufficient time to insure perfect tenderness. For cooking it must be cut in slices about two inches thick, certainly not less.

It is not of much use to try to have a beefsteak dinner unless your stove was made for the purpose. It should be of sheet iron, and large enough to take in a broller through its front door. The fire must be made of hickory wood. This is an important as any other part of the process. The fire is allowed to burn itself down to a bed of glowing coals. In the meantime the broller is made ready with its first load. As many of the steaks as it will hold are laid u dinner would be irretrievably ruined by the introduction of such conveniences as as important as any other part of the process. The fire is allowed to burn itself down to a bed of glowing coals. In the meantime the broiler is made ready with its first load. As many of the steaks as it will hold are laid upon it, and a mixture of salt and sugar is sprinkled over them to a depth of from an eighth to a quarter of an inch. In the preparation and use of this mixture lies one of the secrets of the skillful cook of beefsteak. Over this black pepper is sprinkled, till the white covering of the steak is hidden. Then it is broiled.

Steaks Are Served.

When the steaks are cooked just to the proper turn they are taken quickly from the fire and dropped into a large pan of melted butter. The cook's assistants have them in hand now, while the cook of the steak is holden. Then it is broiled.

melted butter. The cook's assistants have them in hand now, while the cook himself goes to work at once at broiling the next batch. The steaks are taken out of the melted butter and cut into slices of something less than the thickness of a finger. Each slice is laid on a little slice of bread. These are disposed on a platter and passed around. Each guest takes a slice of bread, with its slice of steak on it, in his fingers. At the same time celery is passed, and the mugs are filled up with ale. The dinner is started.

This eating of beefsteak with the fingers is not such a terrible thing as it sounds. It must be remembered that each

This eating of beefsteak with the fingers is not such a terrible thing as it sounds. It must be remembered that each bit of steak lies comfortably on its slice of bread, and the bread is all that has to be touched. The meat, having been properly bred, raised, killed, dressed, hung, cooked and served, does not have to be rent and torn asunder. It is just as easy to bite through the slices of bread and meat together as if the bread had nothing but butter on it. If your steak comes out any tougher than butter, you may set your beefsteak dinner down as a failure and hope to do better next time.

The cooking goes steadily on. As soon as a batch of steaks is ready it is passed around and the cook begins on another. By and by comes about a platter heaped with the bones that have been taken from the steaks before they were sliced. Those who remember that "the nearer the bone the sweeter the meat," take these and gnaw them. Those who are not so full of wise saws let them pass. The cook goes on cooking as long as he thinks that anyone can be induced to eat steaks. After that he broils a few lamb chops, which are served for dessert. The dinner ends with these, unless there is still some ale left which somebody wants to finish up. After the dinner the guests may entertain one another, if they feel like entertaining, or there may be speaking, if anybody is still able to speak. The safest way, if entertainment is desired, is to hire performers for it who do not join in the dinner.

FIFTEEN CHOPS AT ONE MEAL In This Way Yousouf, the "Terrible Turk," Begins His Day's Eating.

From the New York Sun.
You souf, the "Terrible Turk," managed to get his appetite through when he landed in America, and has had it with him When the dawn breaks through his win-

When the dawn breaks through his window Yousouf rises from his doormat, makes a few Mohammedan passes at the sun, bathes his brow in fresh water, and calls for fifteen mutton chops, four cups of coffee and a dozen buckwheat cakes about the size of an army blanket.

His method of moving on his food with the view of establishing a blockade and taking ultimate possession is new to the waiters who serve him. First, he has a vicient dislike for cuisine, and regards table hardware as the tools of infidels and renegades. He quotes a revised edition of the Koran to the effect that "the mighty can conquer all things with their naked hands," and forthwith gives an exhibition of relieving a chop joint of its meat. The inoffensive potato is crushed into the cavern of Yousouf's mouth like a ripe gooseberry.

For luncheon he has about decided that a five-pound cold roast of beef will do for the meat course, but under the pressure he has no very pronounced aversion to a cold duck or a chicken. Potato salad well charged with onions and red peppers touches his palate button about right, and a couple of pies and a few plates of cream puffs and cup cakes keep him satisfied for a few hours in the dessert line.

One of the best and healthlest meals is absorbed by him about 6 o'clock in the evening. It is at this repast that he appears at his best, and would, of a surety, defeat all comers.

He starts off with a quart of some sort of puree, in which he soaks great quantities of bread. He drinks it from a huge bowl.

Several hotels have taken Yousouf on the European plan, but before many days have gone by the management has found it necessary to have a private chat and an understanding. In the meantime he is being well supplied with everything in the market and has choice of the bill of fare.

NAMES OF TORPEDO BOATS. The Deeds of Naval Heroes Whom

the Daring Craft Commemorate.

From the New York Sun.

The torpedo boats in our navy are named after distinguished naval heroes. Could a torpedo boat have a more appropriate name than the Cushing, which commemorates the gallant Union lieutenant who destroyed the ironclad Albemarle at the risk of almost certain death, and whose work was the forerunner of that which his steel namesake is expected to do? On board the little craft the name of Cushing is held up as a constant source of emulation to the members of the crew.

The Porter bears a name that fills the American tar with pride, recalling a famous family of naval heroes.

The Foote is named for the brave and plous old admiral who first taught the Chinese that there was a nation on this side of the world and that they knew how to fight. It was in 1856, when the English and Chinese were at war, that the Chinese forts fired on Foote's ships, which were there to protect American interests. The doughty commander demanded an instant apology. When it was not forthcoming he landed his men and led them against the four forts. Their seven-foot walls of granite were protected by many guns, and contained 5,000 Chinese soldiers, but Foote apured them with 400 Americans, and lost only forty men, against the enemy's loss of 400.

The Dupont is named for the naval leader of the Mexican war, and the Winslow for the commander of the famous old Kearsarge. The Rodgers commemorates one of the naval heroes of 1812. The Ericsson bears a name which revolutionized naval warfare when its owner built the Monitor and sent her against the much feared Merrimac in Hampton Roads.

Our newest torpedo boat, the one which has not yet been brought to this side of the Atlantic, is called the Somers is not so familiar as that of Cushing, yet it is connected with an action as glorious in its courage and more unfortunate in its outcome than that which made Lieutenant. Ushing famous. In the year 1804, when the United States was fighting the Barbary pirates, Somers manned a fireship loaded with gunpowder and combustibles and sailed her into the harbor o

Then the darkness settled down again.

In the morning one of the enemy's ships had disappeared and two others were disabled, but Somers and his bold companions were never seen again. It is believed that Somers blew up the magazine of his ship with his own hand and perished in order to accomplish his object.

A DISAPPOINTED OLD MAID. She Was Balked in Her Unholy Desire to Be Away From Prattling

Voices. Last week old Miss Fussanfethers found the flat she had been searching for so long. The agent informed her that no tenants having children were allowed in the building.

For," said she, "nothing must come between me and that flat."

She could with difficulty be persuaded from paying a year's rent in advance. "It would save trouble," she argued, "and I shall seldom care to leave the ideal seclusion of an apartment building sacred from the disturbing element of childhood."

She could scarcely wait until the paperhargers and painters had finished their work, so anxious was she to enjoy the peaceful repose of her new home.

She moved in late in the evening, thus nearly losing her reputation as a desirable acquisition among the other tenants. They argued that if her furniture was at all good she would not be so anxious to bring it in after dark.

It was very late when she retired, and it seemed to her that she had only slept half an hour when she was awakened by a succession of sounds which caused her to start up on her elbow, exclaiming, "Burglars!"

After some moments, as the sounds con-start up on her elbow, exclaiming, "Burglars!"

After some moments, as the sounds continued, she realized that burglars would not make quite so much noise. To her now sharpened senses the character of the sounds became apparent.

With a cry of "Children!" she sprang out of bed and ran to the window. There they were in the back yard, shamelessly playing marbles and laughing as if no agent existed.

She threw up the window and beheld her neighbor at hers.

"What does this mean?" she gasped.

"No tenant of this building has any children. Who are they?"

"They?" was the sardonic reply. "Oh, they belong to the janitor; he has seven."

And Miss Fussaniethers went and gazed sadly at her ironbound lease.

MEN EXTRAVAGANT, TOO.

The Lords of Creation Spend Mone More Recklessly Than

"It is not without a certain amount of impatience," said a society matron, "that I occasionally hear men speak of female extravagance as if they themselves were models of economy. It is unfortunately true that too many members of my sex models of economy. It is unfortunately true that too many members of my sex spend money foolishly at times, for all-around extravagance and ignoring (if not ignorance of) the value of small sums of money men easily take the palm. And you may be sure that I never allow a masculine sneer on this subject to pass without something in the way of reply. Talk about the extravagance of women! Why, not long ago the plan of an organization composed chiefly of women being mooted, the question of dues arose, and a man suggested quite casually that they be placed at $50 a year. Fifty dollars a year! Why, to most women $60 a year is an immense sum, only to be expended after judicious and careful calculation of how it may be used to the best advantage, while the matter-of-fact way in which it was suggested was an apt illustration of the masculine attitude of mind as regards both large and small sums of money. Men may be capable of economy-doubtless some men arebut to most men the very idea of the small economies which are second nature to women in general is unknown.

"Men have their club dues, usually pretty heavy, but who ever heard of a man who wanted to join a club or casino at a country place for a few weeks who was deterred by any consideration of an expense of $50 or so? They do not stop to consider the relative expense of a dinner or luncheon at a swell place; they jump into cabs in a reckless way which makes women shudder, and so on all along the line.

"Whereas, a woman will walk to save penses closely and carefully to scale' and the thought of a $10 subscription (except to a society like the 'Daughters' or 'Dames' when another even more powerful foible comes into play) would mage her shake in her shoes."

of puree, in which he soaks great quantities of bread. He drinks it from a huge bowl.

Next he has brought to him an entire roundsteak, measuring eighteen inches in circumference and swimming in a quart of gravy and Worcester sauce. The chef through an experience has learned to cut this blanket of beef into about six pieces, which, according to Yousouf's idea, are about the right size to begin hostilities on. Potato after potato accompanies the steak into the esophagus of the wrestler, and when the meats and vegetables have disappeared the "Terrible Turk" yawns, reaches for a punch bowl full of well-seasoned salad, which he completely ompties. He generally drinks six cups of coffee and eats a whole loaf of French bread.
